By Christ for All Nations | www.cfan.org

ORLANDO, Fla., Jan. 10, 2022 /Christian Newswire/ -- Christ for All Nations is thrilled to announce they will launch a two-year School of Ministry in the Fall of 2022. The announcement comes on the heels of a string of monumental firsts for the organization, including the successful launch of Nations Church in Orlando, FL, and a significant expansion of their Great Gospel Campaign evangelism strategy to include up to 10 cities in simultaneous outreach events. The forthcoming CfaN School of Ministry will build on the achievements of their Evangelism Bootcamp – a 3-month intensive course of study that trains men and women with a call to the 5-fold ministry office of an evangelist as described in Ephesians 4. As CfaN President and Lead Evangelist Daniel Kolenda shared, "We've seen so much fruit in training, equipping, and launching evangelists through the CfaN Evangelism Bootcamp. Now we will also be training apostles, prophets, pastors and teachers, youth pastors, children's pastors, worship leaders, etc. Graduates will not only receive an Associate of Arts degree in Practical Ministry, but they will also be trained by some of the best instructors in their respective fields, and they will receive an impartation from the Holy Spirit!" CfaN is particularly well-positioned to offer students access to orthodox theological instruction as well as a wide range of meaningful ministry experience. Christ for all Nations has documented more than 82million salvations since German-born missionary evangelist Reinhard Bonnke founded it in 1974. From its inception into the current day, CfaN's outreach campaigns have been marked with staggering numbers of personal salvations, miraculous healings, supernatural deliverance, and wondrous signs of every conceivable sort. Now under the leadership of Daniel Kolenda, CfaN has developed a multiplication strategy that promises to reach as many people in the next 10 years as the organization did in its first 40. Dubbed the "Decade of Double Harvest," the heart of this approach involves training, empowering, and mobilizing thousands of Kingdom-minded individuals who can work in relational network to the Gospel, disciple followers of Christ, and build influential Christian share communities all over the world. The CfaN School of Ministry is a timely and natural step toward the realization of that vision. Its students will benefit from the incredible foundation and clear direction upon which the school is now being built. Both the heritage of the ministry and its ongoing, Spirit-fuelled momentum have attracted qualified instructors from all fields of Christian ministry. Accordingly, the CfaN School of Ministry will offer a unique combination of solid academic training and hands-on experience – all in an atmosphere overflowing with signs and wonders. Because the School of Ministry will be located at the CfaN Campus and International Headquarters in beautiful Orlando, Florida, the leadership has every confidence that both students and their families will thrive in the fun-laden and economically thriving region. Equally as important, the School of Ministry is already connected with more than 30 denominations in addition to many colleges and universities. As a result, graduates will have the option to use credits earned at the CfaN School of Ministry to continue their education with another institution or take advantage of the robust CfaN network to find fulfilling ministry placement. Applications for the inaugural class are being accepted now, and candidates can already apply online at CfaNSOM.org. Every applicant will receive a personal call from the CfaN School of Ministry president, Joe Oden, to answer any questions and help you take the next step. How to reverse the

"post-Christian" trend: change starts at home

USA (MNN) — The latest survey from Pew Research Center reflects another step towards "post-Christian" America. Believers still hold a majority in the United States, but their share of the adult population fell 12-percent in the last decade. Protestants saw the most significant decline, a category spanning most evangelical denominations, while Catholics held relatively steady. Although believers can influence wider society, the reverse is also true. For example, "if you believe everything you hear in the culture and on television," Greg Yoder, Executive Director of Keys for Kids Ministries, says. "[If] you believe religious leaders who don't [teach] biblical truth, it starts eroding [what] you've learned, even as a child." To combat the secular shift, Keys for Kids Ministries equips entire families to follow Jesus. "We're here to ignite a passion for Christ in kids and teens, but also, families. We're providing tools for moms and dads to disciple their kids," Yoder says. The battle to shape belief and worldview starts at home. Studies show children who hear the Gospel message between the ages of four- and 14-years old are likely to receive Christ as Savior. "We want moms and dads to sense, through the Holy Spirit, that there's something beyond just having a good kid. Having them be good students, getting into that good college, having a family – that's not what it's all about. It's about instilling biblical values [and] the Gospel," Yoder says. "We share the unchanging message of the Gospel with Keys for Kids devotions, our online ministry, our app – with all the things that we offer," Yoder says. Traditionally, parents are the 'gatekeepers' of the family unit, monitoring media before it influences the kids. However, God sometimes takes the opposite approach to reach unbelieving parents. "We see that happen time and time and time again," Yoder says. For example, Storytellers are solar-powered MP3 devices and stuffed animal holders, equipped with nearly 30 hours of Keys for Kids devotional stories plus a Bible in audio. "As kids listen to those, and they come to Christ, moms and dads also come to Christ." Pray believing parents will take an intentional approach to discipleship with their kids. "If we're not living out our faith in front of them and talking about tough things, sometimes they're never going to hear the Word (of God)," Yoder says. Pray that as families put the love of Christ on display, it will lead others to know the Lord. "They (unbelievers) have this negative connotation about what Christians are. They reject it and refute it until they see real true followers of Jesus. That's when things will change." www.keysforkids.org www.mnnonline.org +++

Military is Trying to Boot Christian "Extremists" From Its Ranks

By Tony Perkins

January 6 was a convenient background for a lot of Democrats, but especially the ones in Joe Biden's Department of Defense. To them, it was a chance to highlight the dangers of conservatives — and fight to get them out of the ranks, once and for all. Gearing up to the riot's one-year anniversary in December, Press Secretary John Kirby warned that new rules on "extremist activity" were coming. "As Secretary [Lloyd] Austin has emphasized, the department is focused on prohibited activity, not on a particular ideology thought or political orientation. The department has always maintained a distinction between thoughts and actions." So they say. But behind the camouflage, FRC's Lt. General (Ret.) Jerry Boykin argues, is a different agenda entirely. And it's not about weeding out extremism — it's about weeding out the people of faith and principle. "First of all," he warned, "nobody in the [DOD] can define extremism. And because this is so ill-defined and because there are so many nebulous things associated with [it], what you're going to see if that they're going to start adding to it. And even though they say that they're not after ideology — they're not after people's ideas or people's faith or people's leanings politically — that's just simply not true. [They're] going to start adding groups like ours — the Family Research Council — as an 'extremist group,' telling our troops, 'You cannot be associated with them, because we stand [things like] biblical marriage.'" How does he know? Because it's happened before. Remember, Joe Biden served under Barack Obama for eight years — and in that time, the duo turned America's government into one of the most vicious, anti-faith institutions the country had ever seen. During the wave of "diversity training" in Obama's second term, organizations like the American Family Association were on a hit list of "hate groups" that service members were ordered not to follow or engage. If they did, there would be consequences. If you're associated with them, the military said, you're risking a court-martial and dishonorable discharge. So this isn't an empty threat. It's not hypothetical. It's already happened. Only now, unfortunately, it's starting to progress. Thanks to radical groups like the Southern Poverty Law... Continuation on Page: 11
